

A PHOTO HUNT

It's a nonconventional team building event that is really tons of fun. The guests take photos of their colleagues and are photographed themselves in all kinds of funny situations to make a great collection of photo trophies to be taken home or to the office.

DETAILED DESCRIPTION:

OPENING OF THE EVENT

The guests are taken to a country house and start with a good lunch. Then they are divided into two teams of photo hunters. Just like in a regular hunt, the aim is to get as many trophies as possible, the only difference being that photos are the most valuable trophies in this case. Thus instead of guns each team is equipped with a camera.

The first trophy is the photo of the team before it sets off in search of excellent shots.

Event assistants give each team a compass, a map and the first clues indicating where to start the hunt (the routes that the teams follow are different, but the tasks they have to complete can be the same, only done in rotation).

On your marks, get set, go!

THE HUNT

To get a real experience of the team spirit, the team members are tied together by a rope. Walking or running this way requires good communication and synchronization as well as provides tons of fun. The teams go from one stop in route to another, and each stop is a beautiful spot where the teams have to overcome challenges in order to take really good photos.

When the teams get to the stops on the route, they untie the rope and complete the tasks, which can be extreme, require logical thinking or be related to the topic of culture. Once the teams figure out the answer, it serves as a clue indicating what photo trophy they have to bring, i.e. what exactly they have to photograph (for example, they have to solve a crossword and the word they get in horizontal/vertical line is the thing/object they have to photograph. To make the teams think creatively and to present a challenge, such a word could be 'moonlight', although they are taking photos in the daytime). Joint team effort ensures that they complete the tasks quickly and efficiently.

As soon as the photo is taken, the team members are tied together again and proceed to the next stop on the route marked on their map.

We suggest including 5-7 stops on the route, depending on the time you plan to allocate to the hunt.

EVENING ENTERTAINMENT

In addition, in one of the stops each team finds a small wooden trunk with three keys in it. After completing the task the team chooses one of the keys and keeps it until the end of the hunt. Only one of those keys can be used to unlock the huge trunk with some treasures in it.

The team members helping at the event also join the photo hunt and take photos of the teams as they are busy completing their tasks.

The hunt is over when the teams get all the trophies and reach the finish line.

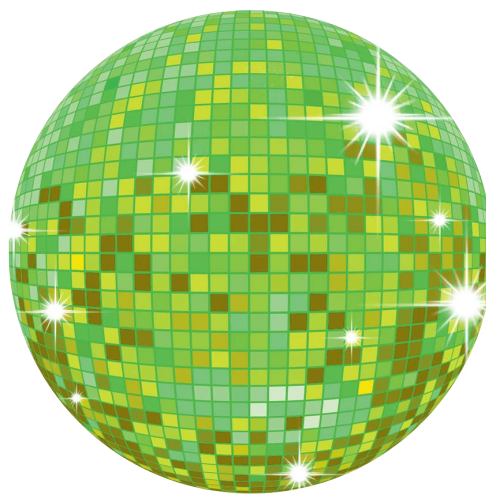

To catch their breath, restore energy and get ready for the evening, the teams are settled for dinner.

Afterwards, it's time to have a look at the photo trophies which are shown on a huge screen (a video projection). The most beautiful and the funniest photos are later printed, framed and given as presents for the teams to take home.

Then the event assistants show what photo trophies they managed to get: the teams are shown (a video projection on the screen) picturing their team work, remarkable effort and funny situations. These photos are later written onto CDs and given to the teams as souvenirs to remember this event.

After everyone has had a good laugh looking at the photos, it's time to find out which of the keys fits the lock of the huge wooden trunk. Inside, the teams find a delicious edible prize. If both teams can unlock the trunk with their keys, they have to share the prize. If both teams fail to unlock it, the event organizers open the trunk themselves, but before doing so, they ask the teams/the guests to guess what could be inside and the team/the guest whose guess is the closest receives the prize. The hunt was a success, so the hunters can celebrate it by raising their drinking horns filled with some alcoholic beverage suitable for the occasion towards the great day.

The evening continues enjoying the food and the drink, singing, dancing and different kinds of games.

We wish you a stunning party!
